CAPPADOCIA

Cappadocia, a registered UNESCO World Heritage site, is a region in the heart of Anatolia that incorporates the provinces of Nevşehir, Kırşehir, Niğde, Aksaray and Kayseri. The name “Cappadocia” is derived from the ancient Persian word Katpatuka, meaning “the land of beautiful horses”. Its countless valleys, underground cities, places of worship and caravanserais make Cappadocia one of Turkey’s most important cultural tourism destinations.

This unique geography, which was formed 25 million years ago out of the lava and ash produced by the Erciyes, Hasandağ and Güllüdağ volcanos, was a center of culture, art and commerce for the Ancient Greek, Persian, Roman, Byzantine, Seljuk and Ottoman civilizations. Its houses, carved into the unique fairy chimneys, and its underground cities, churches, monasteries and madrasahs carry traces of the region’s ancient peoples into the present day.

In the early 1800s, with a predominantly Christian population, Mustafapaşa (Sinassos) was one of the richest towns in the region, and stands today as a living museum, featuring hundreds of stone mansions built into the slopes of five valleys. This symbol of cultural harmony and its historical texture have survived into the present day.

Above all, Cappadocia is a 10,000-year-old campus. The region has a long and respected history of philosophy, theology and humanities teaching.

CAPPADOCIA UNIVERSITY (KÜN) – Partner of the 2nd Global Transdisciplinarity Conference

The first modern school in Mustafapaşa was opened in 1821, which was followed by a school for girls in 1872, a school for boys in 1895 and the Mehmet Şakir Pasha Madrasah in 1900. The Cappadocia Vocational School took root in 2005, and Cappadocia University opened its doors in 2017.

Cappadocia University is home to a highly successful dual-pronged system of academic and vocational programs that act in support of each other. The abstract conceptual knowledge demanded by the 21st century is produced in the faculties, while the requisite skill sets are acquired in the vocational schools of our university, exemplified by our students who now work in the field. These former students, having been well equipped with professional skills, today contribute directly to production.

Cappadocia University is a leader in the field of vocational education, boasting rich academic and technical expertise. These are the academic programs:

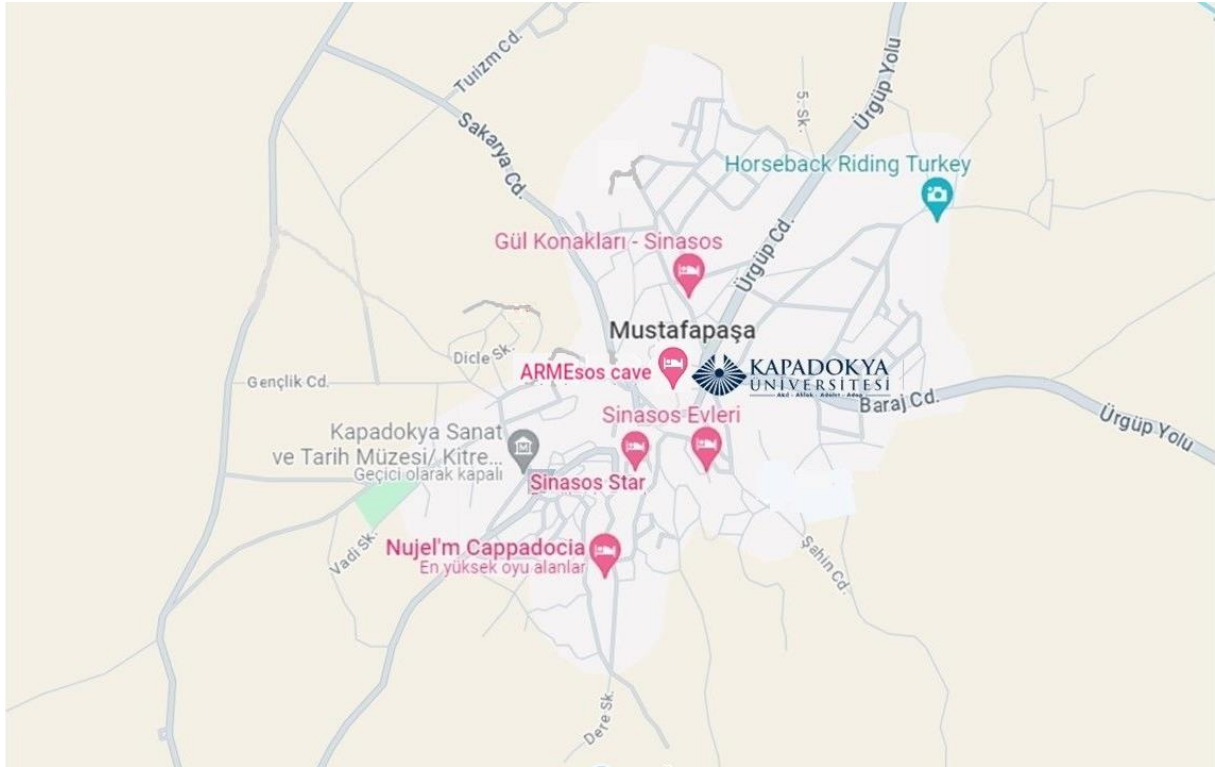

- Cappadocia Vocational College
- Faculty of Humanities
- Faculty of Dentistry
- Faculty of Economics and Administrative Science
- Faculty of Architecture, Design and Fine Arts
- School of Health Science
- School of Foreign Languages
- Graduate School
