

Invitation to a discussion on U.S.-European economic relations, organized by the U.S. Embassy in Austria in cooperation with the Research Lab Democracy and Society in Transition, Danube University Krems.

American-European Economic Relations: What's Changed in the World in the Age of Trump?"

A discussion with Theodore R. Bromund, The Heritage Foundation

After World War II the United States and Europe built a productive economic relationship. Today commentators argue that President Trump is questioning that relationship and pursuing an "America First" strategy. Yet changes in U.S. policy do not come from nowhere. They are a reaction to shifts in Asia and Europe. They are also a response to the failures of past U.S. policies to cope with those transformations.

What: Talk & Discussion

When: Wednesday, March 6, 2019, 6:00 p.m.

Where: Amerika Haus, Friedrich-Schmidt-Platz 2, 1010 Vienna

R.S.V.P.: viennaprograms@state.gov

Ted Bromund studies and writes on U.S. relations with Europe and the European Union, America's leadership role in the world, and international organizations and treaties as senior research fellow at the influential think tank The Heritage Foundation. He is a columnist for Newsday and Forbes; regularly contributes to media such as National Review, FoxNews.com, and The Daily Signal, Heritage's news channel; and has been frequently interviewed or cited by BBC News, CBS

News, CNN, Fox Business, The Atlantic, Bloomberg, Time, and The Financial Times, among others. Mr. Bromund received his doctorate in history in 1999 from Yale University. His thesis on Britain's first application to the European Economic Community won the Samuel H. Beer Dissertation Prize from the American Political Science Association. Before joining Heritage in 2008, he served nine years as associate director of International Security Studies at Yale.