Master of Laws

International Business Law

In the contemporary globalized world, law is no longer a predominantly national matter. All branches of law have lost their national exclusivity and are, to a high degree, influenced by international and regional legal instruments, supranational EU law and often also the law of foreign countries. International commerce is at the heart of globalization and the core matter of today's legal practice.

„The continuing education study program is directed towards students and practitioners from all around the world. It is fully compatible with your job and meets your specific professional topics and interests.“

— Prof. Dr. Eva Feldbaum

Professor for Leadership & International Business Law and

Director SIBE/ Steinbeis University

Continuing education study program

The LL.M. Program „International Business Law“ offers its students the necessary knowledge and skills to excel in the international legal environment. Through in-depth engagement that goes beyond the mere transfer of knowledge the continuing education study program is geared towards the legal needs of today’s globalized economy. The focus is on issues in those specialist areas that are of central importance for practice in international companies, commercial law firms and legal departments: The continuing education study program consists of five modules: EU Law, International Commercial Law and IP & Competition Law, Corporate Law, M&A, International Economic Law, Public Economic Law & Special Topics, International Dispute Resolution and Soft Skills and Legal Research and Writing. In addition to these modules, students can choose their own individual law project with support from the faculty and specialize in any particular area of international business law. This further helps to optimize national and international career opportunities.

Qualification profile

Graduates of the LL.M. Program „International Business Law“ are able to:
